

Titanic : the mystery of the unsinkable ship through ISAN

The sinking of the RMS Titanic which occurred on the night of 14th April through 15th April, 1912 in the North Atlantic Ocean has always been a source of inspiration for the audiovisual world. Many feature films, TV movies, series, documentaries and even cartoons on Titanic, produced all over the world through decades, have tried to tell the story about the sinking, trying to find out what really happened during that tragic night of April 1912. Many works have just been inspired from it: on the scenario of the sinking they have told an imaginary story, mixing in that way the real story with fantasy.

James Cameron's Titanic (ISAN 0000-0000-3EB5-0000-Q-0000-0000-X) has touched tens of millions of viewers around the world with its love story with Rose (Kate Winslet). The film broke all records in 1998 and has launched the young Leonardo Di Caprio's career. It will remain the highest-grossing film of all time worldwide till 2010.

The hundredth anniversary of the legendary sinking is the opportunity to commemorate the tragedy in 2012. New productions have recently emerged, such as the 3D version of Cameron's Titanic, a four hours miniseries "Titanic" directed by Jon Jones or even "Titanic - Blood and Steel" directed by Ciaran Donnelly showing the story of the ship's construction in Belfast.

Presumably the history of the titanic has not yet revealed all its secrets and will remain for many years to come an everlasting topic for scriptwriters and producers.
